A Note from Maggie

A NOTE FROM MAGGIE:

One of the most frequent questions asked at retirement is:

Should I enroll in Medicare after retirement if I have Federal Employee Benefits Program Insurance?

Are you unsure about whether you should enroll in Medicare after you're retired if you're also covered under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program? If so, you're not alone. The number one query I get in my email inbox starts something like this: "I have a simple question for you. I'm about to turn 65 and I'm not sure what to do about Medicare enrollment."

Unfortunately, this is not a simple question to answer. First of all, Medicare has four parts: A (hospital Insurance), B (outpatient or doctor's coverage), C (Medicare Advantage) and D (prescription drug coverage). Each part provides benefits that are largely duplicated by FEHBP coverage. In addition, you will continue to be covered by your FEHBP plan even if you choose not to enroll in Medicare. Despite both of these facts, the majority of federal retirees choose to enroll in Medicare Part A and Part B. Let's explore why.

Most people will have paid the Medicare hospital insurance tax (1.45 percent payroll tax) during their careers and will automatically be entitled to Medicare Part A without paying a premium. This coverage, when combined with most FEHBP plans, will generally cover 100 percent of hospital room and board and other inpatient expenses when Medicare Part A is the primary payer. (Generally, Medicare pays first once your FEHBP premiums are being deducted from a federal retirement check rather than from you or your spouse's paycheck.)

Most federal employees and retirees do not choose to enroll in Medicare C or D. Medicare C can be used instead of FEHBP. It includes Medicare A and B along with additional benefits that may include dental, vision, hearing and prescription drug coverage. Part D provides additional prescription drug coverage for retirees who may not have prescription benefits that meet the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services minimum coverage standards. Generally, this does not include federal retirees covered by an FEHBP plan. That leaves Part B. In 2016, the Congressional Research Service reported that 86 percent of federal retirees 65 and older who were enrolled in a fee-for-service FEHBP plan (such as Blue Cross/Blue Shield, GEHA or NALC) had also signed up for Medicare parts A and B. And 56 percent of retirees who were enrolled in an HMO (such as Kaiser Permanente or United Healthcare) were also enrolled in parts A and B. The report said that in the previous 20 years, the percentage of retirees enrolled in in a fee-for-service FEHBP plan and Medicare A and B had dropped by 6 percent. The percentage of retirees enrolled in an FEHBP HMO plan and parts A and B had declined by more than 10 percent. This drop in Medicare enrollment can be attributed largely to the rising cost of Part B coverage. The standard 2018 premium is $134 per month per individual enrolled. So for a married couple, the cost would be $3,216 per year. In addition, an income-related monthly adjustment amount can raise the cost considerably higher.

About 70 percent of Medicare enrollees are covered by a "hold harmless" provision that prevents the annual increase in their premiums from exceeding the cost-of-living increase in Social Security benefits if the premiums are automatically deducted from their Social Security payments. This applies to about 70 percent of Medicare enrollees. Some 42 percent of Part B enrollees who are subject to this provision for 2018 pay the full $134 standard rate because the 2018 increase in Social Security was adequate to cover the additional cost of Medicare Part B.

People who are 65 or older and covered by a health plan based on current employment can delay enrollment in Medicare Part B without penalty. They will have a special enrollment period that will follow their retirement by eight months. Those who aren't covered by health insurance based on current employment will incur a permanent 10 percent surcharge on the Part B premium for every 12-month period that enrollment is delayed.

So why might you want to add Part B to your FEHBP coverage when you're over 65 and retired? I recently was talking to a federal retiree who requires physical therapy to treat knee problems stemming from years of pounding the pavement as a runner. Her out of pocket expense for the therapy is $100 per visit. She is entitled to a generous federal retirement benefit and has a substantial balance in her TSP account, but she limits her therapy visits to less than those prescribed by her doctor because of the out of pocket expense. If she were enrolled in Medicare Part B, her FEHBP plan would waive the out of pocket expense because Medicare would be her primary payer. Medicare would pay 80 percent of the Medicare-approved amount and her FEHBP plan would only have to cover 20 percent. If her provider participates in Medicare and accepts the Medicare allowance as payment in full, then she would have no out of pocket expense.

Although having Medicare Part B would save her the coinsurance to receive her physical therapy as prescribed by her doctor, she would still be required to pay the additional Part B premium every month whether or not she was receiving therapy. To control the cost of FEHBP premiums in addition to the cost of Part B, she could opt to reevaluate her FEHBP plan enrollment.

Here are some other tips about enrolling in Part B:

- If you're eligible, use TRICARE for Life and suspend FEHBP during retirement. TFL provides "wraparound" coverage when combined with Medicare A and B and also includes a generous prescription drug benefit.
- Check to see if your FEHBP plan offers a health fund or a Medicare reimbursement account. Some plans provide payments to help offset the cost of Part B.
- Keep in mind that the majority of your lifetime health care needs may lie ahead of you. It's more likely you'll need expensive care in your later years.

FEHBP open season is coming soon. This year's dates are Nov. 12 to Dec. 10. Open season provides an opportunity to evaluate your health insurance needs and make the best choice of coverage for you and your family. GovExec:8/2018

Overused expressions reduce their importance

In my opinion, we're overusing some once-useful expressions in speech and in our writing to the point that we're minimizing their importance, usefulness and emphasis. It's kind of like seeing a clever commercial for the first few times, followed by seeing it ad nauseam. You choose your favorite annoying, repetitive radio or television commercial!

I 'm not saying we shouldn't use some of the following terms, but I'm saying we should use them sparingly.

When I was studying journalism at Penn State University 60 years ago--when legendary football coach Joe Paterno was the Nittany Lions assistant coach--my professors drummed into our classes the importance of not overusing popular terms, whether we were speaking, writing for print, or broadcast news stories. Nowadays, with exposure to instant communication, the need to feed the insatiable appetite of 24/7 news operations, and ever-present government-speak--frequently known as gobbledygook and acronyms--we're deluged with once useful words that have become clichés.

Here are some of these overused expressions I wish were used more sparingly. I admit I use some of these terms when I should find alternate ones.

For example:

- --Throwing someone under the bus
- --Something on steroids
- --Someone went missing vs. was reported missing
- --The real deal
- -Something that's going in the wrong direction
- --Boots on the ground
- --That's the bottom line
- --Someone did the heavy lifting
- --Low-hanging fruit
- --Not spiking the football
- --Carrying the water, politically speaking
- --I don't mean to interrupt you, but...with all due respect, then blast someone's comments

--Absolutely

--Impacted should be reserved for impacted wisdom teeth-consider using affected by

--It goes without saying: so why say it?

--With that said

Growing the economy (how about saying expanding it, instead?)

Something that's a game changer

Let me end this column by saying I've highlighted some terms that demonstrate where the rubber meets the road. Oops!

Top 7 Skills Leaders Should Never Stop Learning

With hectic schedules and entire organizations and workforces to manage, business leaders often find themselves too busy to continue their own career growth and education. But being in a position of leadership typically requires quick thinking and advanced adaptability, which is why business owners should never stop honing their professional skills. These seven entrepreneurs share some of the most crucial skills leaders should focus on developing if they want to constantly improve their leadership, and why it's important to prioritize these skills over others.

Communication

Great leaders stay up to date with current strategies and tactics that will have an impact on their organization. One skill that always needs to be developed and finelifeblood of your organization. When you of other individuals, you have the insight to tuned is communication. Clients and employees are the constantly improve your communication and understanding keep moving your team forward.

Listening

Communication is indeed key, but leaders need to understand that an essential part of this skill is the ability to truly and actively listen. Most of the time, leaders assume they need to do the most talking. The best leaders listen more than they talk. Listening is the kind of skill that can always improve over time. Learning to communicate back in a simple way can have a very positive impact on your leadership style. Overcommunication is something to strive for in business, but that doesn't mean overtalking.

Self-Awareness

Perhaps one of the most important skills a leader should focus on is self-awareness, as that can drive future career growth as well as help hone crucial traits. The higher you get in a leadership position, the harder it will be to get objective feedback on your performance from those around you. The best leaders are always working to improve their self-awareness so they can sniff out the 'yes people' around them.

People Skills

We are in a technology rush and we another human being. A leader you can think of -- if it does not forget that any success, business or recognition will be done by should never stop learning people skills. You can have everything relay to people or service the people, you have garbage.

Empowering Others

Learning to encourage others is also key when it comes to managing your workforce. Today's leaders should learn how to empower their teams to do their best work. Leaders should learn how to trust their employees to do their jobs with the right tools. This will free up more time for the leaders to work toward attaining the larger goal.

Creativity

Another important skills leaders should nurture and grow in themselves is creativity, which is often stunted when doing repetitive tasks every day. One day you'll need to use that creativity in a marketing campaign or piece of content. Much like a physical muscle, you must learn to exercise your creative thinking skills. A possible solution is to always try to come up with unique approaches to the issues you're facing.

Positivity

Everyone has bad days or goes through a slump where they're not motivated in their work. So, it's important to continue to work on being a motivating and positive leader. Staying motivated and positive is essential for a good leader who wants to maintain a good working environment for all employees. Because your bad mood can affect your entire team, you need to make sure you continue to work on recognizing the good work of others, helping your team members and developing rapport.

Together we will grow "one by one"
